

Australian Music Centre

The Australian Music Centre is the primary resource centre for Australian contemporary music.

12,000 works by more than 300 Australian composers are represented in the Australian Music Centre Library. The collection concentrates on the works of contemporary composers and is the unique source for many of these items. It also includes over 1000 information files on composers including press clippings, program notes, analyses and articles. Recordings, scores and publications are available for borrowing from the library and for purchase.

The Australian Music Centre website is a major resource on Australian composers, with biographies, lists of works and a downloadable database of works held in the Australian Music Centre library.
